Caption: Day 191 of How to Not Be a Psychopath

Being good at being alone doesn't mean you stop wanting love, touch, connection, or companionship.

It means loneliness stops making your decisions for you.

You stop treating attention like proof that you matter. You stop letting someone's interest become more important than your own peace. And you stop confusing being chosen with being valuable.

The goal isn't to need nobody.

It's to know your worth before somebody else decides they want you.

Timestamps below the frames are actual source frame times. Sampling requests are snapped to the nearest decoded frame.

Transcript timing is unavailable. No spoken text has been assigned to individual frames. The original transcript is included after the visual pages.

STORED TRANSCRIPT

Source: existing stored transcript. Timing is not inferred.

If being alone makes you question your worth, you're probably not afraid of solitude. You're afraid that if nobody is choosing you, then maybe you aren't worth choosing. That's why almost anybody can start to feel like relief. The goal isn't to stop needing people. The goal is to stop abandoning yourself the second somebody wants you. If nobody's told you this today, I love you. I believe in you. If you want to do hard things, you can do hard things. You got this. Come back tomorrow so we can all be a little less crazy together. I love you, y'all. Peace.
