I am 36 years old, and here's 10 things that I wish I knew about relationships when I was 26 years old. Number one, chemistry does not equal compatibility. Sometimes a person that is giving you the biggest butterflies is just activating your biggest wounds. Two, boundaries are not about controlling other people, boundaries are about deciding what you will and will not participate in. Number three, stop listening to apologies and start watching for patterns. People are going to tell you who they want to be, but their behavior will tell you exactly who they are. Number four, you should never have to abandon yourself to keep somebody else ever. If losing them requires you to betray yourself, that is not love. Number five, being misunderstood is not an emergency. You do not need to explain yourself to everybody who gets you wrong. Six, love is not supposed to be transactional. You should not have to constantly earn affection, attention, or reassurance by being useful. Number seven, the right relationship should make your life bigger, not become your entire life. Keep your friends, keep your purpose, keep building something that belongs to you. Number eight, peace can feel very boring when you're used to chaos. Do not mistake anxiety for passion. Number nine, not every argument means that somebody is toxic. Sometimes two imperfect people just need to communicate better. And number ten, stop choosing people based on how badly you want them to choose you. Choose them based on whether their character, actions, and values actually deserve a place in your life. I wish somebody had taught me all of these things at 26, but I had to learn it the hard way. It would have saved me a lot of time.
