Johnny, you're so lucky that you are sober. You didn't see the part where my family wouldn't let me into their home, where my mom took away the key to her house and she didn't trust me to watch my little sister, because for four years I mishandled their trust and it took my family three years to trust me again. Oh Johnny, you're so lucky that you own a successful business and you're selling packs on and people all over the world wear your hats. You didn't see the part where the woman who I thought I was going to marry walked out of my life, put me into a spiral of depression. I didn't work for a year and I had no clue how I was going to make money. I had no clue if this business was going to work, but it was a hail Mary, and I did every single thing that I could working 16 hours a day in order to make sure that this succeeded. Oh Johnny, you're so lucky that you have a social media following that is so big and growing so fast. Yeah, you didn't see the day where two of my closest friends, who I thought would be in my life forever, walked out of my life and told me that I should stop posting on social media. You don't see the days where I sit down and I tweak out about the numbers and why things aren't going the way I want them to go, and I get insecure about the fact that this posted really well, and this post didn't. You see all of these things from the front, but you have no clue what it looks like on the back end. So if your life feels like it's falling apart right now, or things maybe aren't going the way that you want them to go, do not be so quick to call it the end. The things that people are going to call you lucky for later in your life, are being built in the moments that nobody sees. I love you guys.
